What are clinical trials?

A clinical trial is a research study that involves people. These studies help doctors find better ways to treat and prevent cancer and other diseases.

Why are clinical trials done?

Clinical trials are the main way that doctors find better treatments. There are clinical trials for cancer and other diseases. Clinical trials also help doctors learn how to prevent disease or treat symptoms and side effects.

In the United States, the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) says new drugs and other treatments must be tested in clinical trials. This must happen before the FDA approves the drug or treatment for everyone to use.

What is clinical research?

Clinical research is medical research that involves people like you who volunteer to participate in carefully conducted investigations that uncover better ways to treat, prevent, diagnose, understand human disease. This research includes clinical trials that test new treatments, therapies which can provide valuable information about the disease process, improve quality of life for people with chronic illnesses and to help researchers find better treatments for others in the future.

Types of trials

- Diagnostic trials determine better tests or procedures for diagnosing a particular condition.
- Treatment trials test new treatments, new combinations of drugs or new approaches to surgery or radiation therapy.
- Quality of life trials (or supportive care trials) explore and measure ways to improve comfort and quality of life of people with a chronic illness.

Who participates in clinical trials?

Men and women of all ages, races and ethnic groups take part in research. Each trial has guidelines that determine if a person can participate. One set of guidelines is called "inclusion criteria". These are criteria that must be met in order to be a part of the trial and may include age, sex, and specific type of disease. The other set is called "exclusion criteria". These prevent you from participating. Examples would be other medical conditions or other treatments you may already be taking.

CPAN Advocacy Chat Webinar: Clinical Trials in the Community Setting, Cutting Edge Treatment for Cancer Patients. On May 12, 2021, Katie Goodman, Vice President, Clinical Research, American Oncology Network (AON) and Rose Gerber, Director of Patient Advocacy & Education, COA, shared information from the provider and patient perspective on clinical trials, including understanding the different types of clinical trials, the rigorous safety review process, and who is eligible to take part in a trial (hint: just about anybody!). From contributing to advancements in care for patients to expanding one's health outcomes, clinical trials provide opportunities for patients to make an impact on their own health care and on the lives of others going forward.

Spotlight CPAN's Newest Chapter
Genesis Cancer Center, Arkansas

The Genesis Cancer Center (Genesis) – CPAN's newest chapter and first in the state – sees just under 2,000 new patients annually across eight locations in central Arkansas.

Genesis Cancer Center offers affordable, convenient care for thousands of patients in Central Arkansas. Their experienced staff has drawn Genesis to a patient-centered care delivery model. For example, Genesis' friendly staff to answer every incoming patient phone call instead of relying on an automated appointment booking and other services. Speaking with a live person who can consult a patient's medical history and coverage as needed and empathize with patients' needs and feelings is an important way Genesis is enhancing its patient experience.

Staff members take time to participate in CPAN because they understand the importance of community oncology and want to make sure practices like Genesis are able to continue providing the highest care for all patients, even in rural, remote or underserved areas. Genesis' oncologists are steady advocates for their patients every day, in their waiting and examination rooms, on the phone with insurance companies, at the statehouse in Little Rock, and in the halls of Congress.

2021 Advocacy Summit
Empowering Your Cancer Advocacy

2021 Virtual Community Oncology Advocacy Summit

On July 21, CPAN will host its annual Advocacy Summit to discuss key issues impacting cancer care in America. Attendees will learn about topics such as the increased volume of community oncology clinic closures, the bureaucratic burdens that overwhelm physician expertise, delayed access to critical treatments, and more. Summit "graduates" leave equipped and ready to inform policymakers and Congressional representatives about concrete solutions to improve the overall care experience.

Register for free and join us Wednesday, July 21.

ICYMI: Cancer Communication and the Power of Social Media

COA's Rose Gerber and Dr. Sanjay Juneja, better known as theTheOncDoc on TRiAsk, discussed how social media can help those diagnosed with cancer and how to combine traditional medical messaging with the power and reach of social media to make the greatest impact.

Chapter Spotlight
New York Cancer & Blood Specialists

With over 480 staff members across 20 locations in the Empire State, New York Cancer & Blood Specialists (NYCBS) leverages every resource in their network to provide world-class cancer care to the 48,000 patients they serve each year.

A team of oncologists, nutritionists, nurse practitioners, physician assistants, social workers, and more care for and support patients in a way that can only be found in community oncology practices. Their onsite research center allows them to participate in clinical trials and deliver cutting edge treatments to patients.

After more than four decades of service to New Yorkers, NYCBS understands the value of community oncology and the need to protect practices around the country so they can continue to serve patients with cancer. Since joining CPAN's Advocacy Army in 2013, NYCBS has made its voice heard at the national and state levels, arranging meetings with New York legislators, and joining other CPAN members to advocate on Capitol Hill.

About CPAN

The Community Oncology Alliance Patient Advocacy Network (CPAN) is a national advocacy organization committed to raising awareness of independent, community cancer care and the issues that affect it.

CPAN was created in recognition of the vital role patients play in advocating for access to local, affordable cancer care. The network educates the community about policy issues affecting the quality and accessibility of cancer care at the local level. It also serves as a non-cancer type specific organization for individuals to learn how to become advocates for cancer care and provides community oncology practices with education regarding the economic and administrative pressures facing clinic operations.

CPAN advocates – including patients, survivors, caregivers, nurses, pharmacists, oncologists, and more – share their personal stories and advocacy power so elected officials understand the importance of local, affordable, and accessible cancer care close to where they live and work.

Join COA's Patient Advocacy Network (CPAN)

The COA Patient Advocacy Network (CPAN) is a national network of patients, survivors, caregivers, family members, medical and oncology professionals, and others who advocate on legislative issues affecting the quality and accessibility of cancer care. CPAN chapters are active in community oncology practices across the country and are regularly in Washington, DC meeting with policymakers. As a CPAN (Community Oncology Alliance Patient Advocacy Network) advocate, you will learn about these issues, meet other local and national advocates and have the opportunity to attend educational events.

Independent Physicians of the Carolinas

Independent Physicians of the Carolinas is a nonprofit 501(c)(6) membership organization whose mission is to create public awareness of medical doctors not employed by a network or hospital system and to provide educational programs and resources to physician members and their administration. Visit us at ipcarolina.org.

Oncology Specialists of Charlotte formed a local chapter of the Community Oncology Alliance Patient Advocacy Network (CPAN) and is inviting all patients, family members, caregivers, and medical navigators to join and learn more. There is no cost or obligation to be a part of the group. The purpose of CPAN is to support the cancer patients who are passionate about the many facets of getting cancer care in a community oncology practice and rallying for getting drug/therapy approval, research, and legislation for access to care. Due to COVID-19 safety measures, meetings will be held virtually until guidelines change. This patient advocacy group is led by oncologists Justin Favaro, MD, PhD, and Nasfat Shehadeh, MD. Email Sherie Bradshaw at oncologycharlotte.com to be included. For more information on CPAN, visit www.coaadvocacy.org.

Robert Nahourai, MD, FAAP, child and adolescent neurologist, has rejoined Mecklenburg Neurology. The physicians specialize in epilepsy and sleep disorder care for both children and adults. The practice is accepting new patients. Locations are in Charlotte, Concord, and Laurinburg, with new locations opening soon. Call 704-335-3400 or visit www.meckneurology.com.

Firas Kassab, MD, FACR, is celebrating the six-month anniversary since opening Articularis Healthcare-South Charlotte Rheumatology, an independent rheumatology practice in the Blakeney/Ballantyne area. The practice is fully staffed with an infusion suite, laboratory, and diagnostic ultrasound. Dr. Kassab and his staff have all been vaccinated against COVID-19 for the safety of patients. The practice is in-network with all major insurance plans. New patients are promptly scheduled and usually seen within two to three weeks. Referrals can be faxed to 866-469-2745 (or called in to office at 704-672-0449 for more urgent work-ins).

Dermatology Specialists of Charlotte, in partnership with DJL Research Network, currently are enrolling patients in the following clinical trials:

- Inflammatory Acne: This is a comparative 16-week study of Accumax sublingual nutritional supplement (Diindolylmethane, DIM + Vitamin A) and Quercetin vs. placebo.
 - Dermatology Specialists of Charlotte: Participants must be 16 years or older and have moderate-to-severe acne consisting of ≥ 20 papules/pustules and erythema. Compensation for qualified patients is $200 for each completed visit (six in total).
 - Atopic Dermatitis: A phase 2 randomized, double-blinded, placebo-controlled study to evaluate the efficacy and safety of MEDI3506 in adult subjects with moderate-to-severe atopic dermatitis. MEDI3506 is a human Ig monoclonal antibody that binds to IL-33 to inhibit the inflammatory response linked to AD pathophysiology. Participants should be ages 18-65 with documented chronic AD for at least one year prior to screening with at least 10 percent BSA involvement of disease. Enrollment time is approximately 27 weeks and patients are provided a stipend of $75 for each completed visit.
 - Alopecia Areata Totalis/Universalis: A double-blind, randomized, placebo-controlled study to evaluate the efficacy and safety of CTP543 in adult patients with moderate-to-severe alopecia areata. Participants must be ages 18-65 with greater than 50 percent hair loss and a current episode of loss timeframe of six months to 10 years. CTP-543 is a selective JAK inhibitor. Patient stipend per completed visit is $50.
- For more information, visit clinicaltrials.gov. If you have a patient or friend interested in participating or learning more, call 704-943-3714 and choose option 6 to speak with the research coordinator. Or, email research@dscmdl.com for more information.

Charlotte Gastroenterology & Hepatology is an independent specialty practice with 22 highly-skilled doctors. These physicians have been serving the Charlotte area for more than 40 years. They are board-certified in gastroenterology and offer special expertise in advanced biliary endoscopy, liver disease, and liver transplant. At Charlotte Gastroenterology & Hepatology, patients are treated like family by the most respected and knowledgeable leaders in the gastrointestinal community.

Regional Cancer Care Associates is one of fewer than 200 medical practices in the country selected to participate in the Oncology Care Model (OCM), a recent Medicare initiative aimed at improving care coordination and access to and quality of care for Medicare beneficiaries undergoing chemotherapy treatment.

American Oncology Network Partners with National Patient Advocacy Organization Fighting for Patient Rights

January 14, 2021 07:00 ET | Source: American Oncology Network, LLC

Fort Myers, Fla., Jan. 14, 2021 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) — American Oncology Network, LLC (AON) a high-growth oncology provider partners with the Community Oncology Alliance Patient Advocacy Network (CPAN) helping fight for patients healthcare rights by deploying advocates not just locally but taking the issues directly to Capitol Hill.

CPAN is a national advocacy organization committed to raising awareness of independent, community cancer care and the issues that affect it. CPAN plays a vital role in advocating for patients making sure cancer care is affordable and accessible in the communities where they live.

Genesis Cancer Center in Hot Springs, Ark. and Vista Oncology in Olympia, Wash. are AON practices with local chapters raising awareness about patient rights to advanced treatments, clinical trials and affordable high-quality care without having to travel long distances.

"I am happy and honored to be a part of our newly created local chapter to help fight for patients and their healthcare rights and to make sure their voices are heard," said Genesis Cancer Center Medical Oncologist Dr. Stephen "Fred" Divers. He also serves on the Board of Directors for the Community Oncology Alliance (COA) dedicated to advocating for community oncology practices and the patients they serve and is Chairman of the AON Advisory Board.

"AON's visionary drivers are founded on helping community oncology practices thrive ensuring patients have access to exceptional cancer care close to home," said AON CEO Brad Precht, MBA. "With two AON practices actively working with CPAN, we are ensuring legislative policies affecting cancer patients like less personalized medicine, increased cancer care costs and rising medication prices are being pushed to the forefront—making their voices heard."

From an operations standpoint, community oncology practices face many challenges including economic and administrative burdens, payer complexities and high procurement costs. In fact, data from the 2020 Community Oncology Alliance Practice Impact Report shows that since 2008, 1,748 community oncology clinics/practices have closed, merged or been acquired by a hospital, or are struggling financially.

There are currently 27 active CPAN chapters across the U.S. advocating in Washington, D.C. influencing policy and expressing the importance of community oncology. CPAN advocates at local chapters include patients, survivors, caregivers, family members, physicians, staff and community members.

Rose Gerber, Director of Patient Advocacy and Education for CPAN said, "We support the care but we advocate for the care." Gerber continued, "Local chapters are important to our cause of educating, engaging and activating cancer care advocates across the nation, helping to ensure patients benefit from quality, affordable and accessible cancer care."

AON practices, Genesis Cancer Center and Vista Oncology, are working together with CPAN to mobilize community oncology advocates to become politically active and raise awareness of the healthcare issues affecting cancer patients.

CPAN Advocacy Chat: Paving the Path for a World Without Colon Cancer

September 14, 2021

An understandably important issue to the COA Patient Advocacy Network (CPAN), and most other cancer organizations, is cancer screenings. Unfortunately, fear of catching COVID-19 understandably stopped many from getting screened for cancer over the last year, and this worrying trend continues. Recent studies, including one conducted for the Community Oncology Alliance (COA) by Avalere Health, confirm an alarming drop in cancer screening, diagnoses, and treatment.

That is why the non-profits COA and CancerCare partnered to launch "Time to Screens", a major public awareness campaign to encourage people to take control of their health by getting recommended cancer screenings and helps them locate safe, convenient locations to do so.

About Video Documents External Links

The Community Oncology Alliance (COA) is a non-profit organization dedicated to advocating for community oncology practices and, most importantly, the patients they serve. COA is the only organization dedicated solely to community oncology where the majority of Americans with cancer are treated. The mission of COA is to ensure that cancer patients receive quality, affordable, and accessible cancer care in their own communities. More than 1.5 million people in the United States are diagnosed with cancer each year and deaths from the disease have been steadily declining due to earlier detection, diagnosis, and treatment.

How to Get Your Doctor to Speak Your Language

It was a dark day in 2011 when Karen Concannon learned that she had multiple myeloma, a deadly blood cancer. Only about half of the people diagnosed with it are alive 5 years later. And the treatments can be grueling and often leave lasting side effects.

A top priority for Concannon was to ask her oncologist detailed questions about her disease and what to expect. Luckily, Concannon's doctor turned out to be a master communicator.

"I never left his office questioning anything or feeling like I didn't get the whole story," she says.

Whether you've been diagnosed with heart disease, injured your knee, or need guidance on managing your diabetes, it's important that you and your doctor understand each other clearly. That lets you weigh the pros and cons of different therapies, know what you must do to get better, and get a realistic sense of your long-

Genesis Cancer Center Medical Oncologist Dr. Fred Divers has started a new chapter in the Community Oncology Alliance Patient Advocacy Network, a national organization that advocates for patients on Capitol Hill and provides local education.

"Some patients really want to speak out and as their red badge of courage they want to help others in any way that they can," Divers said. "Other patients are more private, but the CPAN chapters are a way to keep the patients engaged, provide patients with important education, but also act as a conduit so their voices can be heard in D.C. if, in fact, they're concerned about limited access to care."

5/12/2021 Trial Talks podcast - Patient Advocacy and Oncology: How A Community Cancer Network is Making a Difference – RG speaker

Approximately 39.5% of all men and women will be diagnosed with cancer at some point during their lifetimes, and yet only 5% of oncology patients participate in clinical trials. Many industry leaders think that a greater focus on patient advocacy could be the missing link.

In this episode, Rose Gerber, Director of Patient Advocacy and Education at the Community Oncology Alliance – once a patient herself and now a dedicated advocate – will share her story and discuss how patient advocacy is helping to increase patient enrollment in clinical trials across every therapeutic area.

Featured Guests

Rose Gerber

Director of Patient Advocacy and Education with the Community Oncology Alliance

Rose Gerber is a nationally recognized cancer advocate and cancer survivor. She has appeared on MSNBC to speak about cancer care, met with legislators in Washington, D.C. on cancer policy issues, developed cancer programs, and served on national patient advocacy panels, steering committees, and cancer coalitions. She also served as a consumer reviewer on the Congressionally Directed Medical Research Programs - Department of Defense Breast Cancer research panels. Rose was brought to the Community Oncology Alliance (COA) team to develop its patient advocacy program. The advocacy track she added to their annual conference successfully brought together top physicians, administrators, and advocates.

Rose has been featured in media campaigns by cancer organizations, including the 2015 Above Clinical Trials initiative. She was recently featured on the cover of Breast Cancer Wellness magazine, and honored as the National Breast Cancer Leader of the Year. She was a guest speaker for CURE magazine's September 2018 podcast, From Cancer to Capital Hill. She has been the keynote speaker at national conferences including the National Women's Survivors Convention. Rose served for five years as a grant reviewer, speaker, and educator for Susan G. Komen and also co-founded a breast cancer mentoring program for Eastern Connecticut.

Advocacy Programs Update – October 2021

Many vital patient support groups are struggling to survive in a post–COVID-19 world. Some advocacy organizations have endured or are facing massive layoffs, office closures, and funding decreases. In some extreme cases, this is forcing them to look for merger partners. As resources are depleted and demand grows, our panelists will discuss the future of patient advocacy groups and the vital role that they have in not only supporting patients and caregivers but also the academic and community oncology providers.
